Diary Entry By: CRAIG RODERICK

2010 has come and gone, with a tremendous volume of major life changes. From selling a home in MA and upgrading to a sprawling estate in beach town York, ME, to getting hitched, it was a banner year for Craig. If that was all that occurred, it would be reasonable to expect a handicap the size of Endicott's tuition, or Brian Wylie's salary at Wylie College. However, Craig also decided to quit his job of 70 hours a week cleaning toilets and painting walls at the ol' country club, and decided to focus on something more specific. Currently, Craig has taken on the role as an outside sales consultant for Jungle, Inc., an apparel and corporate promotions provider based in Ipswich, MA. Working from his home office, afternoons are spent working the game at the prestigious The Ledges Golf Club in his new hometown. <http://www.ledgesgolf.com/>

"It was a big leap of faith to go from the cozy confines of Camp Cuddles, but the voice of Oz simply got too loud to handle and I was losing myself and my golf game in the indentured servitude." Craig continues, "So I got off the tit and am just focusing on three things – my lifestyle, my golf game, and striped bass." Of course, if it were that easy we would all be so lucky. "As far as golf goes, I am taking this year to get better – not top 10 but perhaps top 15. I know I have things to work on and have hit more golf balls this year than the last three combined. I may keep the driver in the bag and play it safe, and work within what my strengths are; long irons and the short game." Roderick has a resume that has him shooting mid 80's, but that may as well have been in the mid 1980's. Here's to 2011 – it's time to get better, all around.
